We used to know what an office was. A place to show up, sit still, tick boxes. A space built for routines, not for people. But work changed. And so did we.

We work in new ways, at new rhythms, with new expectations. And yet most offices still cling to the old script. Still grey. Still static. Still built around desks instead of energy.

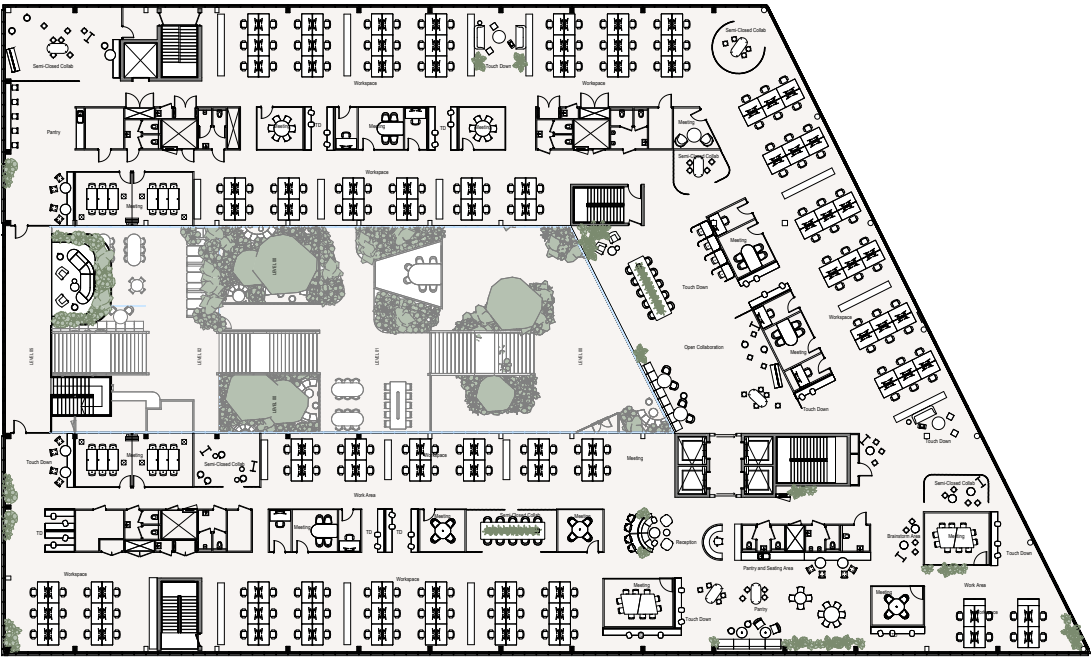

So we imagined something else. A building that breathes. With light, greenery, and space to move. Not just physically, but mentally too. A place where you shift from focus to flow, from meetings to moments that matter.

The building is being carefully refurbished, with particular attention to the ground floor, transforming it into a contemporary, welcoming base that brings the building in line with the expectations of today.
